Magnolia macrophylla

Here shown with Felisa, it has larger leaves and flowers than any native plant in North America. Leaves are silvery gray beneath, and flowers are delightfully fragrant, pollinated by beetles. This species, as well as its much smaller-statured subspecies ashei are choice garden specimens if not crowded.

Not picky about soil or growing condition preferences, it also has no significant disease or insect issues. No wonder its evolutionary history, like that of the ginkgo, dates back more than 100 million years. It's a survivor. Zones 5-8

We offer Large Plugs with 6-12" & 1-2' stems, ready for a #2 or #3 container. This item will stand out in your clients' product line and profit both of you.

Stewartia monadelph

Tall Stewartia is more refined in character than its more familiar Japanese cousin, Stewartia pseudocamellia. It's most at home in a shaded soil of moderate moisture, but will not disappoint its fortunate owner in full sun.

Covered in 2-inch June blossoms, it seems hard to imagine how a tree can support such heavy blooms year after year. Winter interest is tremendous with its modest growth rate, handsome orange/cinnamon bark, and strong resistance to ice damage. Free of disease or insect pressures, it is low maintenance and a great fit for modest landscapes where space limits tree choices to only the most impressive of all small trees.

Heavy transplants like these, 4-5' & 5-6' tall are seldom available. Get at least a 2-year supply now to distinguish your business from your competition.

Cercidiphyllum japonicum

Katsuratree is a multi-sensory seasonal experience. Although it needs a spacious landscape spot, the reward is a lifetime of garden delight.

Spring brings bronze emergent leaves that glow when backlit by the morning sun. Summer leaves are a handsome heart-shape, bluish green and totally trouble-free. Then autumn brings the unforgettable foliage aroma of burnt sugar as the warm glow of orange, yellow and pink emerges behind fading chlorophyll. Winter form is handsome – upright, and becoming broad and spreading with advanced age. Scaly bark adds winter interest.

Zones 5-9

Reliable performers, our Medium Plugs offer inexpensive shipping and a quick turn time if you plant them in a #1 or #2 pot. They're also large enough to take directly to the field.

Magnolia 'Black Tulip'

This new plant elicits more “oooh-ahhh” from a female audience than any other magnolia we’ve ever grown. That’s a whole bunch of magnolias.

Small in stature, it would fit almost any landscape, and its goblet-shaped flowers are truly distinctive in shape and color. A precocious bloomer, it’s easy to care for and cold hardy. The blackish-purple flowers draw immediate attention, so it should have a home in every magnolia-lover’s garden, whether planted as a specimen, by the front door, or right on the deck in a cedar tub.

Romneya coulteri

Zones 7-10

Matilija Poppy - Elegant in all respects, from its handsome blue-green foliage to its crinkled white flower petals adorned at the center with an explosion of large orange-yellow pollen bearing anthers. Exceptionally easy to grow in a dry, neglected garden corner in full hot sun, you must deliberately plant it there and don't fuss over it, or you will surely bring disease pressures. This is not your grandma's delicate oriental or opium poppy. Tougher than a Baja rattlesnake - until you water it.

Medium Plugs are so easy to re-pot with a dibble stick into a #1 or #2 pot with loose soil mix. Ask us about POS photograph use.

Flowers are a rich palette of orange, pink, yellow and purple. Exceptionally vigorous, you can plant them in almost any low landscape border and generally forget them until they astonish you in bloom. Tolerant of dry or seasonally wet soil, they are simply delightful garden plants, and not a single one the same as the others. Inexpensive and fast to finish.

Large Plugs – a dependable and easy size to bump up for quick turn on your investment. Save a few back for your own garden to cut flowers for your kitchen sill!
